4.6	Evaluation of quality of the education <ol style="list-style-type: none"> The Director of Studies is responsible for monitoring the quality of the courses and teaching. To this end the Director of Studies will ensure that quality assurance involves evaluating courses and an evaluation at curriculum level. In ensuring the quality of courses the Director of Studies will draw on the advice and suggestions for improvement of the curriculum committees on promoting and safeguarding the quality of the course. The courses and teaching in the degree programme will be evaluated using one or more of the following means: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> – course evaluation: at the end of the course, the participating students are asked to evaluate the course through the digital survey system; – evaluation at curriculum level: through curriculum dialogues (in Dutch onderwijsgesprekken) – by means of the National Student Survey (Nationale Studenten Enquête – NSE) the students will be asked for their opinion on all aspects of the courses, teaching and the facilities.

	3. Students who have participated in courses offered by the Faculty of Humanities will be informed of the results of the course evaluations.

Appendix 2 - Transitional Provisions MA International Relations 2023-2024

There are no transitional provisions for students who started before 2021-2022. These students should contact the study advisor if they have questions about their study programme.

Students who started in the academic years 2021-2022 or 2022-2023 need to complete the education programme as described in the EER-attachment for their academic year. If certain components of the programme are not offered in the current academic year 2023-2024, the following transitional provisions will apply.

The new compulsory courses are equivalent to the old courses (see below), unless stated otherwise. If a student has completed the old course, the new equivalent course can't be taken as well.

Students who still need to complete one or more electives, should choose from the courses offered in 2023-2024. They should make sure to choose a course that does not have a major overlap with already completed courses. Courses with too much overlap are indicated in the tables below. If two courses are labelled equivalent, only one of them can count toward the student's study programme.

It is possible to make the transition from the exam programme of an earlier cohort to the programme of the current academic year (2023-2024). If the student chooses to do so, they must comply to all regulations of the exam programme of the current academic year and must request approval from the Board of Examiners. Please contact your study advisor if you are considering this.

Appendix 3 (art. 3.3) - Language Policy

International Relations in Historical Perspective

International Relations is an internationally orientated field of study. Our program prepares students for a career in the world of international politics. It is therefore mandatory that students acquire strong reading, writing and presentation skills in English. English is the dominant language used in academic publishing on the field of International Relations. Consequently, all the assigned literature and primary sources are in English and all our courses are taught in English. Moreover, the English language is the lingua franca in the world of international politics and business. Our students need to be comfortable using the English language to professionally operate in internationally orientated positions. To prepare them for these positions, our students complete internships at organisations that operate in an international setting, such as ministries, embassies, international organisations and NGO's for which a good command of the English language is typically required. In addition, our program offers an international learning environment with students and staff from abroad, which in itself helps prepare students for a career in an international setting.

Conflict Studies and Human Rights

The MA Conflict Studies and Human Rights program is taught in English for several reasons. Firstly, English is the language of choice given the international character and orientation of the program. A diverse and international classroom increases the ability to study (inter)national violent conflict from multiple perspectives, which is key in our program. Teaching in English makes it easier for students from diverse linguistic and cultural backgrounds to communicate and collaborate effectively. Secondly, Conflict Studies and Human Rights is an international field of research, and English has become its lingua franca. The program involves reading primary and secondary texts from all over the world and discussion of them takes place in English. This promotes a common language and facilitates effective communication and collaboration among students and faculty members. Thirdly, the program prepares students for an international career, either inside or outside of academia. Acquiring excellent skills in academic English is, therefore, an integral part of the program. This is necessary to enable students to compete effectively in the international job market and communicate their research findings effectively to a global audience.

In conclusion, teaching the MA Conflict Studies and Human Rights program in English is a strategic decision that supports the program's international character and orientation, prepares students for an international career, and provides an international learning environment.
