Description (maximum 2,000 characters):

In discussing the origins and implications of international trade, economists emphasize comparative advantage, increasing returns to scale and consumer love of variety but pay relatively little attention to the firms that actually drive trade flows. Yet engaging in international trade is an exceedingly rare activity: of the 5.5 million firms operating in the United States in 2000, just 4 percent were exporters. These firms run by managers may be subject to different biases such as too much aversion to risk or loss aversion. The objective of this research will be to identify such biases by constructing appropriate data or exploiting existing data sets.
